With the development of the integrated circuit technology, the speed of the integrated circuit increases and the area occupied by a cell within the integrated circuit is reduced. Therefore, the importance of a memory cell used for storing data is greater.

Currently, the mainstream memory cell is an N-channel MOS transistor, which is manufactured using the integrated circuit manufacturing process. It is well known in the art that the feature size of the N-channel MOS transistor is reduced continuously and the MOS transistor is vulnerable to electrical overstress, especially to an electrical overstress due to a power-on condition. Therefore, a reliable power-on detection structure is required for the memory cell.Many of us are familiar with the United States Military Prison Camps of the War
